PRINCE TUAN CANTRILL.

What a Magnificent Match He Is For "J. Kammar," Alias Tom Campbell.

Louisville Evening Post, July 24th.

The most extraordinary developments of the trial at Georgetown occurred yesterday in the outbreak of Judge Cantrill. It is important; indeed, it is of first importance, throwing, as it does, a flood of light on the proceedings in the most momentous trial ever held in the state of Kentucky. Mr. Caleb Powers has been indicted by the Commonwealth of Kentucky for being an accessory before the fact of the murder of Mr. William Goebel. The evidence tends to show that Mr. Caleb Powers is to be tried upon a charge of conspiracy, in the course of which Mr. William Goebel was killed.

The result is that two weeks have been passed in an attempt to prove that Mr. Caleb Powers and other political associates of Mr. Powers, believing that justice was not to be done them if the people remained quiescent, decided to bring to Frankfort Republicans from various parts of the state. It has been shown by the witnesses for the Commonwealth that Powers instructed his associates to bring none but sober and discreet men. Time and again he insisted upon these conditions. It has also been shown by Powers that Powers made a number of violent threats concerning what was to be done in the various circumstances which might arise.

In all of this there is nothing remarkable, if one will only consider the time. Mr. W. B. Haldeman, himself, in November, pending the count of the vote by the Central Triumvirate, issued a card in which he stated his readiness to march to Frankfort at the head of a thousand of the bravest men in the city of Louisville. Threats of all kinds were made and of the most violent character. Some of these threats were personal threats, conveyed by third parties to the object of them, just as men went to Mr. Goebel with the statement that he was to be killed. Threats did not come solely from one side to the other; they crossed each other, and they exhibited a condition of affairs at Frankfort which bordered close upon anarchy.

The prosecution has been allowed to tell this story in its own way by all sorts of witnesses. Men were permitted to state what they overheard on the streets from men they knew nothing about, from men who may have been detectives or bunco steers, whose authority to speak could not be established and the value of whose utterances no man could determine. Yesterday Governor Brown cross-questioned a witness, striving to show that these threats were not confined to one side of the line, that these boisterous drinking men were not all anti-Goebel men, but that members of the Legislature, visitors to Frankfort and others about the hotels were talking in the same wild and random manner.

Judge Cantrill ruled out these questions, and there followed a remarkable colloquy between the Judge and the counsel for the defense. For more than two weeks now the prosecution has held the stage. It is nearly six months since Mr. Goebel was assassinated. The prosecution has failed by its own witnesses to locate the place at which Mr. Goebel fell. It has failed to develop facts indicating even a suspicion on its part as to who fired the fatal shot. It has failed to show that there was anything like a legal Coroner's inquest over the body of Mr. Goebel. The case has been conducted by Thomas Campbell of Ohio after the manner which has made Mr. Campbell famous throughout the country. He appears at one moment as the spokesman of the Commonwealth and at another he is a detective under an assumed name. He appears at the next moment in pursuit of a fugitive; he goes through all the phases of a grand stand play to secure extradition papers to bring one Noakes from Virginia to Kentucky, and then Noakes turns up as one of the hypnotized victims, one of those confiding creatures who told to a stranger by the name of Kammar the inner secrets of a hideous conspiracy to massacre half of the Kentucky Legislature. Noakes is allowed to tell his own story in his own way, contradicting in many of its essential features evidence given by those other witnesses for the Commonwealth, Culton and Anderson.

The whole proceedings overthrow one's conception of what we call criminal jurisprudence in Kentucky. Following these two weeks of failure to bring testimony to bear upon the indictment itself; following a two weeks' attempt by means of testimony to change the charge under which Powers is arraigned, we have in the midst of this testimony a long argument between the counsel for the prosecution and the Judge on the bench, in which the Judge angrily brings an accusation against the counsel for the defense that they are making daily political harangues to the assembled crowd in the presence of the Jury under the pretext that it was an argument to the Court, forgetting that these political harangues were addressed to a Jury composed of ten Goebel partisans, one Prohibitionist and one Republican. How could Judge Cantrill suppose political harangues of the character he describes could influence that Jury favorably? Then Judge Cantrill took the opportunity to give his own unique interpretation at this time as to the Bill of Rights. The chapter is one that will long be studied by students of the development of law in the state of Kentucky.
